Equality at the Ballot Box

Up until the Civil War, in most places, the right to vote in the United States was restricted to white males 21 years and older. At that time, each state, not the federal government, set rules about who could vote.

African-American Suffrage

In 1857, the U.S. Supreme Court ruled that enslaved people were property of their owners, not citizens, and had no legal rights at all. Ten years and a Civil War later, African Americans were not only free, but they were free citizens. In lowa, the path had been set to grant them the right to vote.

The first two lowa constitutions adopted in 1846 and 1857 limited suffrage (the right to vote) to white males 21 years and older. While enslavement might have been illegal in lowa, many state laws still discriminated against African Americans. The "Black Codes" that required African Americans to post financial bonds to live here and denied them the right to serve on juries were designed to discourage African Americans from moving to lowa. A strong majority in the state opposed interracial marriage and dehumanized and discriminated against African Americans.

"The First Vote," 1867. This illustration shows African-American men in outfits indicative of their professions standing in a line waiting for their turn to vote. Courtesy of Library of Congress

The Civil War began to reshape white attitudes toward African Americans. Iowa soldiers fighting in the South saw the evils of enslavement first-hand. After the southern surrender, the Republican Party was eager to grant African Americans the right to vote because they anticipated their votes would be strongly Republican, the political party of Abraham Lincoln and the opponents of their former masters.

In 1868, white male lowans (the only lowans who could vote) approved a constitutional amendment striking the word "white" from voting requirements - partly due to the organizing work of notable civil rights activist Alexander Clark. As a result, a man of any race could vote in lowa if he was 21 years old and a resident. At the same time, the 15th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution outlawed denying the right to vote to anyone on the basis of race, color or previous enslavement status.

Women's Suffrage

While African-American males were winning the right to vote, advocates for women's suffrage saw an opportunity to advance their cause. Carrie Lane Chapman Catt, who was raised in lowa, rose to the head of a national association promoting women's suffrage. Early victories in several western states led women's advocates

This billboard urged lowans to "vote yes" to a women's suffrage amendment to the lowa Constitution on June 5, 1916. Courtesy of State Historical Society of lowa to believe that they could soon gain the right to vote across the nation, but it remained a tough battle.

Around the turn of the century, women were allowed to vote on referendums like bond issues, but not in "elections" where there are candidates. This was known as the partial suffrage.

In 1916, Iowa votes (still all male) narrowly defeated a women's suffrage amendment that would have struck the word "male" from the state's voting requirements. Nevertheless, when Congress submitted the 19th amendment to the U.S. Constitution to the states for ratification, the Iowa legislature approved it. In the 1920 elections, women across the United States went to the polls. Later in the decade, Iowa women won the right to serve on juries and be elected to public office.

American-Indian Suffrage

American Indians had a long and complex legal status within the United States. The tribes were considered separate nations, and the U.S. government signed treaties with them just as if they were other countries. In most cases, American Indians could not vote unless they left their tribes. Partly in recognition of their military service in WWI, Congress passed the Snyder Act in 1924 granting full citizenship to Native Americans whether they remained on tribal lands or moved into mainstream society. This included the right to vote. The 26th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution was ratified in 1971. It expanded the right to vote in federal elections to citizens 18 years and older, lowering the legal voting age from 21. Each state had to approve it.

Over time, laws in the United States have both restricted and extended the right to vote. The number of legal voters has expanded widely since the U.S. Constitution was adopted. Voting is the most basic right of each citizen, and who gets the right to cast a ballot for elected leaders has been a widely debated issue. Today, there is a debate over whether those who have committed a felony should have the vote, even after they have served their time. Other issues may still surface.

Introduction

- 1st Reading: Teacher reads aloud.
- 2nd Reading: Students read aloud and mark text. During the reading, underline vocabulary words and put a question mark (?) next to parts that need clarification. After reading, circle parts that help answer the lesson supporting question.
- 3rd Reading: Students re-read as needed in order to find answers these questions that help answer the lesson supporting question.
- 1. Authors often signal readers that important ideas are coming up by starting sentences with transition words and introductory phrases. Look for the underlined transition words and introductory phrases in the "African American Suffrage" section. In your own words, list the main ideas that come after them.
- 2. Write a two or three sentence summary of the "African American Suffrage" section.

3. Add events from the article to the timeline.

Ask Questions

At the end of this lesson, answer the question: How have suffrage laws changed over time for African Americans?

4. What questions will you need to know the answers to in order to address the question above?

Possible Categories

5. What patterns do you notice in the topics of the questions?

Alexander Clark's Speech at the "Colored Convention" in Des Moines, Iowa, 1868

ADDRESS

OF THE COLORED STATE CONVENTION TO THE PEOPLE OF IOWA IN BEHALF OF THEIR ENFRANCHISEMENT.

PREPARED AND DELIVERED TO THE CONVENTION BY A. CLARK, CHAIR-MAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON ADDRESS, FEB. 13th, 1808.

To the People of Iowa: To every true, honest and libertyloving citizen of Iowa do the colored men of your proud commonwealth appeal for sympathy and aid in securing those rights and privileges which belong to us as freemen. Having established our claim to the proud title of American soldiers and shared in the glories won by the deeds of the true men of our own color, will you not heed and hear our appeal? We appeal to the sense of justice of the Legislature and of the people of our own State, for those rights of citizenship without which our well-earned freedom is but a shadow. We ask no privilege; we simply ask you to recognize our claim to manhood by giving to us that right without which we have no power to defend ourselves from unjust legislation, and no voice in the government we have endeavored to preserve. Being men, we claim to be of that number comprehended in the Declaration of Independence, and who are entitled not only to life, but to equal rights in the pursuit and securing of happiness and in the choice of those who are to rule over us. Deprived of this, we are forced to pay taxes without representation; to submit, without appeal, to laws however offensive, without a single voice in framing them; to bear arms without the right to say whether against friend or foe-against loyalty or disloyalty. Without suffrage, we are forced into strict subjection to a government whose councils are to us foreign, and are called by our own countrymen to witness a violence upon the primary principles of a republican government as gross and outrageous as that which justly stirred patriot Americans to throw overboard the tea from English bottoms in a Boston harbor and to wage war for Independence. Let a consistent support be given to this principle of government, founded only "on the consent of the governed"-to this keystone in the arch of American liberty-and our full rights as freemen are secured. Our demands are not excessive; we ask not for social equality with the white man, as is often claimed by the shallow demagogue; for a law higher than human must forever govern social relations. We ask only that privilege which is now given to every white, native-born or adopted, male citizen of our State-the privilege of the ballot-box. We ask that the word "white" be stricken from the Constitution of our State; that the organic law of our State shall give to suffrage irrevocable guarantees that shall know of no distinction at the polls on account of color; and in this we simply ask that the "two streams of loyal blood which it took to conquer one, mad with treason," shall not be separated at the ballot-box; that he who can be trusted with an army musket, which makes victory and protects the nation, shall also be intrusted with that boon of American liberty, the ballot, to express a preference for his rulers and his laws. We demand this as native born citizens of the United States, and who have never known other allegiance than to its authority and the laws of our State, and as those who have been true and loyal to our government from its foundation to the present time, and who have never its interest whilst even in the midst of treason and under subjection to its most violent enemies. We ask, in the honored name of 200,000 colored troops, five hundred of whom were from our own Jowa, who, with the first opportunity, enlisted under the flag of our country and the banner of our State, and bared their breasts to the remorseless storm of treason, and by hundreds went down to death in the conflict, whilst the franchised rebels and their cowardly friends, the now bitter enemies of our right to suffrage, remained in quiet at home, safe, and fattened on the fruits of our sacrifice, toil and We make these demands as one of right and necessity, if not expediency, and are unwilling to believe that a powerful, ruling people, strengthened by new victories with the aid of our hands, could be less magnanimous in purpose and in action, less consistent with the true theory of a sound democracy, than to concede to us our claims. We believe that with expediency even our demands are not at war, but that with right does public policy strike hands and unite our votes, as it did our muskets, to the maintenance of authority over the disorganizing elements which attend a returning peace. We have too much faith in the permanency of this government to believe that the extension of the elective franchise to a few loyal colored men could unsettle its foundation or violate a single declaration of its rights. Therefore we will not believe but that the people of Iowa will be the first to do full justice to the men of color, as they have been among the foremost in upholding the flag of our country. We rejoice in the fact, and congratulate the people of our own color in every part of the land that in the recent State election Col. Merrill has been chosen to the gubernatorial chair, and the entire Republican State ticket elected by the handsome majority of nearly thirty thousand votes, and that they stand as firm on the manhood suffrage issue as did their predecessors. In this can the colored men of Iowa take courage, and say to our white friends, we are Americans by birth and we assure you that we are Americans in feeling; and in spite of all the wrongs which we have long and silently endured in this our native country, we would yet exclaim, with a full heart, "O, America! with all thy faults, we love thee still."

Portrait of Governor William M. Stone, 1868

This portrait is of William M. Stone, who would serve as Iowa's Republican governor during the end of the Civil War. Before being elected, he was a decorated officer in the Union Army, and at one point, had been a prisoner of war during the Civil War. Stone also was a lawyer and held several governmental offices during his lifetime. During the Republican convention of 1865, a prominent issue was African-American suffrage. The Republican Party largely supported political equality for African Americans, though most believed that social equality was not to be obtained. In 1866, the lowa legislature began amending the state's constitution to remove the word "white" from the suffrage article. In 1868, the men of Iowa 21 years of age or older — who were the only ones with the right to vote at that time — voted for African-American suffrage with 56.5 percent of the vote.

Alexander Clark's Speech to Iowa State Colored Convention, 1868

Alexander Clark, an African-American barber turned lawyer from Muscatine, became a hero of African-American rights in the state of lowa. In this address to the "Colored Convention" in Des Moines, Clark calls for the lowa legislature to approve and then place before the voters the removal of the word "white" from voting laws within the lowa Constitution. The vote passed, and lowa became the first state in the nation to have a successful grassroots movement for African-American suffrage.

Distribution of the Colored Population of the United States in 1890,1898

This is a statistical atlas of the United States that is based on the results of the 11th U.S. Census, completed in 1890, shows the distribution of the "colored population" of the country. As can be seen in the distribution map, members of the targeted population predominantly resided in the southeast.

1. Which states had the highest African-American population in 18	90?

2.	What impact might the 15th Amendment have had on different regions of the United States? Remember, the 15th Amendment states that "The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

Voter Registration Literacy Test in Alabama, 1964

After the Civil War, many states enacted literacy tests as a voting requirement. The purpose was to exclude persons with minimal reading skills, in particular poor African Americans in the South, from voting.

This was achieved by asking these prospective voters to explain less well known parts of the U.S. Constitution or rejecting their applications for errors. Literacy tests, along with other Jim Crow laws and "black codes," were put in place to limit the rights of African Americans.

This sample voter registration application, featuring a literacy test, was used by W.C. Patton, head of the NAACP voter registration program, to educate black voters in Alabama before they went to register to vote.

This photograph by Warren Leffler shows African-American demonstrators outside the White House, with signs reading "We demand the right to vote, everywhere" and protesting police brutality against civil rights demonstrators in Selma, Alabama. On August 6, 1965, U.S. President Lyndon B. Johnson signed the Voting Rights Act of 1965 into law. This law gave the federal government the authority and funding to ensure that all legal-age citizens were allowed to vote in all states, without obstructions such as literacy tests, thus fully enacting the 15th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.
